Folktale Stories

A folktale is a fiction or make-believe story that teaches us good morals or how to behave properly, usually using animals that act like humans. Folktales sometimes try to explain how something came to be, like how a tiger got his stripes or a camel got his humps, for example. Although they are not true, they are funny, fun to read and teach good lessons along the way. Folktales have been told all over the world for a very long time using oral tradition or telling the story from one generation to the next without writing it down.
